FORAKER TRIES TO PUT HEARST IN ANANIAS CLUB

Former Ohio Senator Warmly Defends Himself From Editor's Charges.

which he made in defense of his own spurse when in September, 1908, Mr. Searst attacked him and read the first of the Standard Oil letters in a speech of Columbus Ohio. Further than this, he amplified those statements and sought to support previous assertions concerning the propriety of his conduct by setting forth various details. In the beginning, Senator Foraker, who appeared with counsel, John Daish, of Washington, said he had requested the committee to allow him to appear as a matter of privilege to refute charges made against him through the letters published by Mr. Hearst. He then read extracts from Hearst's magazine, insofar as they reflected on him, pupctuating the reading of these extracts with vitrolic remarks at the expense of Mr. Hearst. While he occupied the stand, a considerable crowd filled the committee room, among them Congressman Nicholas Longworth, of Ohio, who was an interested listener. Tiking up the letters read by Mr. Hearst in his Columbus speech, Senator Foraker said that one of them was a letter from Archbold, asking him to support Judge Burkett for the supreme court of Ohio, another asked him to oppose Smith Bennett of Ohio, for attorney general of the state; two related to bills in the Legislature which Standard Oil opposed, and two contained remittances of money from Standard Oil, one for $15,000 and one for $15,000. (Continued from First Page.)

Replies to Charges. Senafor Foraker said Judge Burket have supported him in any event; that he supported instead of opposing Ben-nett, and did not answer the Archbold mett, and did not answer the Archbold leffer; that the bills in the legislature became law in a form more objectionable to the corporations, and that neither in hispect to these or other matters in the legislature had he been guilty of lobbying. As to a certain bill desired by the street railway interests in Cincinnati he had appeared before a legislative committee by request, and made a public statement.

Turning to Mr. Longworth, Senator Foraker said:

"I think Mr. Dongworth was a member of the Besiature at the time, and voted for the bill."

Mr. Longworth shook his head, and said he was not a member at the time.

"I beg pardon," said Senator Foraker, "it may be I am mistaken."

Checks For Legal Services.

He denied he had wrongfully sought to influence national legislation and as to the remittances of $15,000 and $14,000. he said those were for legal services to he said those were for legal services to the Standard Oil in Ohio before he became Senator. He reiterated that he was pleased at the time to have it known that he was counsel for Standard Oil.

Coming to the letters put into the record by Mr. Hearst yesterday, and capacially to those said to be new, Mr. Foraker said the one relative to Archbold sending him £50,000 was not new and he declared that if Mr. Hearst had not suppressed the facts he would have given out a copy of a letter he had in his, Hearst's pocket at the time, showing Foraker returned the money.

Was Agent For Editor. Was Agent For Editor.

He then explained that the $50,000 was sent him because James L. Rodgers, of sent him because James L. Rodgers, of Columbus, a newspaper man, now consult general at Havana, has asked his help in getting an option on the Ohio State Journal. In order to help him, Foraker applied for money, he said, to Standard Oil. He found Stanard Oil willing to "loan" $25,000. But it later raised the sum to $50,000. But it later raised the sum to $50,000 was resulted to $10,000 was returned to Standard Oil. "I wish to pay a tribute to Senator Hanna in this connection," said Foraker with a smile. Hitherto, Senator Foraker said he had not used the name of the newspaper man because he did not know but it might cause him to lose his place when the matter first came up.

Reads Copy of Letter.

As confirmation of his statements that he had returned to Archbold the $50,000, Foraker read the following letter:

Forsker read the following letter:

"Washington, February 14, 1902.

"Dear Mr. Archbold—I very greatly regret to have to inform you that the proposed transaction at Columbus has falled—at least, for the present.

It may be revived later, but I doubt if I shall care to bother about it any more. However that may be, I herewith send you, with many thanks for your kindness in the matter, New York drafts for $50,000, payable to your order, as repayment of the money advanced by you on the above-mentioned account.

"Kindly acknowledge receipt of same and oblige Yours very truly.

"Stelen Books" Photographed.

"Stelen Books" Photographed.

In closing, Senator Foraker told a remarkable story of how Hearst got the correspondence. He said that he, Foraker, had had a lawyer, Gilchrest Stewart, of New York, working on this matter for months. It was disclosed matter for months. It was disclosed, he said, that two colored men, trusted employes of Archbold, stole the correspondence books ip. Archbold's office, took them to the Hearst offices and had photographs made. The deal was made, as Senator Foraker described it, following a preliminary meeting betwen the colored men and one of Hearst's men at the Savoy saloon, New York.

The two colored men, he testified, were Willie Winfield, a son of Archhold's butler, and Charlie Stump. In their negotiations, which were first at the saloon and then at the Hearst offices, they met with City Editor Eldredge, John Eddy, and a man named Mooney. They got $34,000 in all, according to Senator Foraker.

It is alleged by Foraker that the colored men took the matter up through reading how a trusted employe of a prominent man had robbed him of his correspondence and sold it for big mency. Senator Foraker suggested that Wmfield and Stewart be summened.

Contradicts Hearst.

The statements of Senator Foraker as to where Hearst got the letters and the to where Hearst got the letters and the circumstances are so fiatly at variance with the testimony of Mr. Hearst yeaterday as to surprise the committee. Mr. Hearst will be recaled in all probability and all of the parties who can be found who are supposed to have any knowledge on this subject are likely to be subpoensed. Mr. Hearst, in his statement yesterday, said he got the letters from John Eddy, at Columbus, Ohio, and knew nothing as to how they were obtained.
